A few days ago I talked about the Justice Departments decision to sue the state of California over its decision to protect illegal immigrants from deportation by passing a law preventing companies from voluntarily helping ICE.

Now, setting aside my distaste for a law which prevents voluntary association California does have some authority.

The Constitution does not give the federal government the authority to deal in this matter. It is left to the States or to the people.

Well, I got a little backlash on social media so I thought I'd go a little deeper today in a full breakdown.
