This is another podcast from one of the many podcasts that I like to listen to. This one is from the I Had to Say It podcast.

Mandate roll backs, gas prices, and the Salt Life

In this episode I will be talking about how and why the country is on the skids. Shocking right? I will touch on the conflict in Ukraine, the pain at the pump, the fact that the same people who spent the last four years saying "not my president" are all of a sudden screaming about "respect for the office." The people invested in the jab and the face diapers are doubling down even though the science is now going against them. They are saying "just because they are saying not to wear the mask any more doesn't mean you should." and other crap like that. It is an approach based in fear and a need to maintain the lies they tied their identities up in. And speaking of tying your identity in a lie, what about living in the Midwest qualifies as part of the "salt life?" Seriously the nearest ocean is something like a thousand miles from here. You are not living the salt life, not that you don't look salty with that stuff all over your truck.
