This is another podcast from one of the many podcasts that I like to listen to. This one is from the I Had to Say It podcast.

Passion, Balance, and Happiness

Do what you love and you'll never work a day in your life. But is that really the case? Is passion enough? When you do things because you HAVE to is it still possible to WANT to do them? I have thoughts, shocking right? But ultimately the key, as with so much in life is balance, which I also have thoughts on. And as usual I ramble a bit and get distracted. Also there is a promo in this episode for SP Filmviewers, a podcast I just started listening to, where one host has seen the movies, the other just watched them for the first time, and they talk about it. So far I am digging their dynamic, and you should at least check them out. Also go cop some gear from horribledesigins.com, it's still good and I am not gonna stop plugging it so you might as well get onboard.
