This is another podcast from one of the many podcasts that I like to listen to. This one is from the Jason Stapleton Program, definately worth a listen!

574: A Unique Take on the Syrian Chemical Attack

We all heard about the recent chemical attack in Syria and the prevailing narrative coming out of the government and being carried by the media is that Assad ordered the attack in a brazen attempt to end the war.

But let me ask you a question.

Why would Assad, who has managed to retain power, keep the Americans and Allies at bay and enlist the support of the Iranians and Russians risk everything by using chemical weapons?

In December Assad, with the help of the Russians was able to take back the city of Aleppo. He was winning. Why risk a war with America by doing something that would virtually guarantee a defeat?

Something smells funny, and I'm going to give you my take on it today.

We'll also get an update on the North Korea situation. The situation is not improving, and a recent defector has given us some news that is concerning, to say the least.

A meeting between President Xi of China and Trump is scheduled for later this week at Mar-a-Lago, and it will be imperative Trump secures the support of the Chinese if he intends to take military action to put down the North Korean Dictator.

Finally, employment numbers are up, and Trump is taking credit, but does he deserve it? I think not.

Enjoy the show, don't forget to like and share!
